

Environmental Health Careers

Center for Environmental Health helps to improve the lives of all New Yorkers.

Department of Health

Make more than a career. Make a difference.

Join our team which helps to protect people and the environments where we live, learn, work, and play. Opportunities are available to work in communities or in office settings.

The work we do

- Protect food. Inspect restaurants and train workers in safe food handling practices.
- Protect public drinking water. Oversee compliance with regulations and help protect New York's public drinking water from source to tap.
- Protect children. Inspect summer camps and swimming pools.
- Reduce health risks. Investigate environmental exposures and their impact on public health.
- Conduct important research. Contribute to our scientific understanding of health concerns related to the environment.
- Help communities. Develop programs that help communities prepare, adapt, and reduce risks from climate change.
- Help New Yorkers make healthier choices and reduce injuries. Conduct audience based educational research which informs the Department's messages for videos, websites, and media campaigns on topics related to injury prevention and health and the environment.
- Control exposures. Work with health care professionals to control and monitor the use of radiologic technology. Protect the public from radon that may seep into their homes.
